

Apartments And Personal Vehicles

Apartments are the residential side of LSOL. They are separate from your office network, but they still affect how comfortably you move around the world and where your personal cars live.

Two Ways To Access An Apartment

Apartments support two access modes:

- Owned
- Rented

Both modes let you use the apartment, enter the interior, and access the personal garage flow. The difference is long-term cost.

Owned Versus Rented

The main rule is simple:

- owned apartments do not accrue recurring apartment rent
- rented apartments do accrue recurring rent and can be cancelled later

If you just want housing quickly, rent is faster. If you want to eliminate recurring residential cost, ownership is the long-term answer.

The Active Apartment Rule

One apartment acts as your active home.

The active apartment controls:

- interior access
- personal garage access
- where personal vehicles are assigned
- normal home-based sleep or rest flow

If you change active apartment, your personal vehicle setup follows that choice.

Personal Garage And Dealership Flow

Once you have apartment access, you can:

- visit the personal dealership
- buy personal vehicles
- assign them to the active apartment
- retrieve or store them through the personal garage interaction

This system is separate from your office fleet. Personal cars do not replace commercial trucks.

Selling Or Cancelling Access

Apartment state is normalized around your actual access mode.

That means:

- rental-only apartments can be cancelled
- rental access can be upgraded into ownership
- owned apartments can be sold
- losing the active apartment clears or reassigns personal-garage expectations cleanly

Motels

Motels are the lightweight rest option.

They are useful when you need a sleep or rest stop but do not want to invest in a permanent apartment immediately.

When To Buy An Apartment

Apartments matter most once:

- you want a stable personal vehicle base
- you are spending more time moving between districts off the clock
- you want the residential side of the save to feel complete

If money is tight, grow the commercial company first. Apartments are valuable, but they do not replace the office as the center of progression.
